

This article explores the impact of U.S. export controls laws and economic sanctions on the international collaborations of colleges and universities and their faculty and students, which are controlled by the U.S. government from a national security interest perspective.