

This Note explores how colleges and universities react and respond to data breaches as they become increasingly common in the higher education context. These institutions are subject to both federal regulations and state notification laws that alter how they prepare for data breaches and how they deal with the aftermath. This Note proffers best practices for colleges and universities, and examines the types of lawsuits these institutions can expect to face following a major cybersecurity breach.