

This article highlights the distinction between student loans, which are nondischargeable in bankruptcy, and student account debts, which are dischargeable, and addresses some issues that arise out of the debtor-student and creditor-institution relationships. This article also makes some suggestions as to how a creditor institution can better protect its rights when a student is on the verge of filing for, or already has filed for, bankruptcy protection.