

Colleges and universities must take responsibility for the hazing occurring on their campuses in both the fraternity and student-athlete context. This Note discusses why liability should be imposed on colleges and universities for hazing and what limits should be placed on that liability. Consistent with the historical evolution of tort law, a college or university should be held liable for any injuries to students resulting from foreseeable hazing incidents.