

The Supreme Court's decision in Parents Involved in Community Schools v. Seattle School District No. 1, cases which struck down race-conscious student admission plans for public schools in Seattle, and Louisville, brought the contentious topic of racial preferences back into the headlines. Although the decision deals with K–12 education, it has significant implications for higher education. This article explores those implications.